Rye resident Steve Clarkson
Discusses his recent book,
The Last Run
Wednesday, September 13
6:30 pm at the Rye Public
Library

ABOUT THE BOOK:

Prohibition in the 1920s is often recalled as a big-city phenomenon—speakeasies, bootlegging mobsters, the flaunting of the constitutional edict by the urban wealthy, and the tragic plight of the cities' poor. But the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act also had a devastating—and highly dramatic—effect on everyday folks in small towns throughout the country. The Last Run is a story about that impact. On July 10, 1929, a headline in the Portsmouth (New Hampshire) Herald announced: Find 139 cases of Liquor Planted in Rye Harbor; Cargo Worth Between $12,000 and $15,000 Seized by Coast Guard—Thought to Have Come from Nova Scotia. The mystery behind the origin of the liquor and the identities of the perpetrators of the crime was never solved. In The Last Run, the author imagines the story behind the story.

Rye Beach August program a Great Success

In August, RHS researcher Jen King presented some preliminary images and information she is developing for a walking tour of Rye Beach to an overflow audience at the library. Many in attendance provided much needed feedback and some signed up to assist Jen in bringing this tour to completion. In the future RHS will present a detailed program on Rye Beach, one of the oldest parts of Rye, including one house that dates to the 1720's.

Three members of the RHS Board are also on the Rye Heritage Commission? They are already planning on ways to coordinate the 2023 festivities for the Rye area.
